Key Art by kevin garcia.The present invention relates to a method and a system for packaging and storing samples, particularly nucleic acid samples, and more particularly to a method and a system for packaging and storing nucleic acid samples for high throughput processing. The ability to extract and/or manipulate nucleic acids in a reproducible manner is of paramount importance in modern molecular biology. In addition to providing the foundation for many diagnostic techniques, the ability to screen large numbers of nucleic acid samples allows the detection of rare nucleic acid sequences, the correlation of expression levels of different genes in a given sample, and the characterization and comparison of genetic sequences from divergent organisms. Because nucleic acids are inherently fragile and possess little inherent stability, nucleic acids are typically separated from other molecules and complexed to the surfaces of solid supports. For example, cellular or viral DNA is separated and recovered by forming a plug in a microtiter plate containing lysis solution and storing the plate at low temperature for an appropriate period of time. The time required to lysate cells is a function of the number of cells in the sample. Samples containing fragmented nucleic acids are then typically recovered using solid supports, such as glass microspheres, polypropylene microspheres, or similar matrices. For example, a first sample can be analyzed by hybridizing to a nucleic acid affinity matrix immobilized on a support. A second sample can then
