We're working on a number of things to make the experience better for the community. Wednesday, May 24, 2009 The Lawyer Job I'm a lawyer, and recently I made a bad decision, to return to the 9-to-5 grind. I know all the reasons why: Kids; desire to help people; the bar; money. But something happened - someone who really needed me apparently didn't get the help he needed. Someone who really was hurting, in part because of my office. I feel for him, and really want to help him. He is a really good guy. I think we had some potential to be great friends. And I have two great kids. Doing this job right is the other reason. I want to really give it the old college try - get my head into something - learn something new - be a better father, a better citizen, a better lawyer, do a better job. So, it's time to jump back into the golden ring and - in my words - re-invent the wheel. It's time to start all over again, to try for the prize that can't be refilled, time to get back on the track, time to become the lawyer that I used to be. So, I've learned a lot, and I'll learn more. It's been too long since I wrote a blog; I've got a great editor now. I hope this blog will prove helpful to you and your readers, and will also give me some perspective on life.No matter how confident Republicans are that they will come out on top in the 2018 midterm elections, they should fear that they have a big problem: the midterm electorate is poised to be younger, and younger people vote differently than older people. The U.S. presidential election is a test of who can mobilize that youngest generation of voters and get them to the polls on election day. And the 2018 midterm elections will test whether the electorate can sustain high voter turnout in successive elections. Democrats are again targeting the youth vote, mobilizing younger

Democrats, and getting younger voters c6a93da74d
